CHINA'S FAMINES

efficient machine was built up which undoubtedly saved tens and hundreds of thousands of lives.

Seventy Famines in Seven Centuries.

The leading figure on the famine field, a man of scholarly tastes combined with unusual executive gifts and rare personal charm is the Rev. H. C. Patterson of Suchien, who is home on furlough at St. Paul's, Va. Mr. Patterson has made a scientific study of famines, their causes and possible prevention. He tells me that in this Kiang-poh region, of which Suchien is the center, there have been no less than seventy great famines during the past seven hundred years, one at least, of them covering all of north China and others extending clear from the Yangtze to Santung. Only three or four of this number have been due to lack of rain, floods causing the others. The loss of life has amounted to uncounted millions. Nothing has heretofore been done in the way of scientific prevention of these recurring disasters.

Needs Famine Programme.

He thinks that China should, like India, have a regular "famine programme." Enough money should be funded by the government to support twenty-five per cent. of the population of the affected areas for six months of a year and all possible preventive works should be taken in hand, such as canal dredging and surveying, etc.

All over the famine field may be found monuments to the relief work of the foreigners and to the merciful "Jesus religion." The effect of American help in these calamities has been nationwide, contributing largely to the present condition wherein America leads all the nations in her influence over China. The condition is curiously illustrative of the new sense of world-solidarity and world-brotherhood that has come over mankind today. China's need became the opportunity of the religion of the west and it has done more to create a ready hearing for the gospel message than anything that the missionaries themselves could design. Good Samaritanism is still the best expression of Christianity.

REBELLIONS IN CHINA.

We have just recently come very near having another rebellion in Kansu. And it is a wonder that rebellions are so few, when one considers the many causes for friction between religious Moslems and pork-eating idolaters. The destructive uprising of sixteen years ago started from a very insignificant cause.

The writer happened to be down at the Tao River some time ago and was surprised to see so many people with mules and carts loaded with grain, furniture and merchandise hurrying across the bridge. Upon inquiring for the cause I was informed that trouble had broken out among the Moslems and other Chinese in Maki-aki, a market town sixty li west of the city. This district is about equally divided between pork and non-pork eaters, but the most flourishing business is in the hands of the more enterprising Moslems.

A Chinese who had received official permission to open a restaurant in the center of the town was the immediate cause of the present trouble. This right was hotly contested by the Mohammedans, who would on no condition allow a pork-eating Chinese to open a restaurant in the center of the town. They refused on the plea that the water of the stream, which flows right through the town, and hence is the common property of all, would be defiled by the vessels of the Chinese restaurant keeper.

The Moslems openly affirmed that they would rather rebel than allow this, and it looked serious enough for a while, for neither would give in. Many of the well-to-do merchants, both Chinese and Mohammedans, began to move away and many took refuge in the city. All sorts of rumors were abroad.

Local officials had tried their best to reconcile the parties, but without success. The Viceroy finally dispatched a deputy, who visited the place several times and conferred with the elders; but nothing could be done to establish quiet and peace until the permission to the Chinese restaurant keeper to open had been canceled.

So the Moslems scored a victory this time and rebellion was averted. A couple of the leading Moslems were brought before the civil mandarin and bamboozled, and thus ended an affair which had stirred up a good part of the province for a month or two. It was like living near a volcano for the time being. And many of the poor people, who have already passed through two destructive rebellions, were fearfully frightened—Shanghai Mercury.

BOYS AS BOAT BUILDERS.

In the building of motor-boats, for instance, the youngsters of this country have earned recognition within the brief period of a decade. Motor-boat construction in the United States has been known as a profitable enterprise for nearly twenty years. While professional boat builders have been devoting much time and attention to the new form of craft, many boys, too, have started in to build the boat which now figures conspicuously in American sports. Naval architects and boat builders who have seen the models and designs produced by these youngsters, still in their teens, have accorded them unstinted praise and admiration.

In the beautiful northern district of New York City, near Columbia College, away from the din and clatter of the central metropolis, may be found a school which has set aside a class for the designing and building of model motor-boats. This is the seventh grade of the Horace Mann School. And, though the class was formed only two and a half years ago, a number of worthy models have already been turned out by the students.

The credit for the formation of the class belongs to Howard Brundage, a graduate of Columbia University. Believing that the study and making of small motor-boats would prove a good mechanical test for the boys of the school and enable them at the same time to acquire a valuable knowledge of boat construction, he suggested and instituted the boat-building class. Of course, this addition to the course of study was at first intended only for those students who were especially interested in mechanics; but, needless to say, a small army of future citizens joined the class—Harry Davis in St. Nicholas.

Once upon a time, a man who was too economical to take a paper, sent his little boy to borrow the copy taken by his neighbors. In his haste, the boy ran over a four dollar stand of bees, and in ten minutes looked like a watery summer squash.

His cries reached his father, who ran to his assistance, and, failing to see a barb-wire fence, ran into it, breaking it down, cutting a handful of flesh from his anatomy and ruining a five-dollar pair of pants.

The old cow took advantage of the gap in the fence, got into the cornfield and killed herself eating green corn. Hearing the racket, his wife ran, upsetting a four-gallon churn full of rich cream into a basket of kittens, drowning the whole "flock." In her hurry she dropped a seven-dollar set of teeth. The baby, left alone, crawled through the spilled milk into the parlor and ruined a twenty-dollar carpet. During the excitement the oldest daughter ran away with the hired man, the calves got out and the dog broke up eleven sitting hens.
